

Five Things to Do

at John Graham Reserve, Woodman Point Regional Park

Walking

John Graham Reserve is a popular spot for walkers with many trails weaving along the coast of Woodman Point. Once you've explored Ammo Jetty, we suggest following the paved path which meanders through costal scrubland.

The fenced nature reserve also offers a walk through tuart woodlands.

The beach stretches around 4km, and you can choose to walk on the paved path or on the beach.

Cycling

The cycle paths at John Graham Reserve are flat and paved, providing an easy ride for all ages. You can follow the trail for 9km, taking you directly to Fremantle following the beautiful coast.

Cyclists can also follow the path roughly 3km to arrive at Woodman Point Headland.

Have a Picnic

The wide-open grassed area makes John Graham Reserve a perfect place to bring your family and friends for a picnic. Shaded seating is available throughout the park, and accessible as you travel along the wide pathways.

John Graham Reserve has an abundance of shaded seating options and public barbecues for use. Food and beverages can also be purchased from the Woodman Point Beach Kiosk Café.

Fishing

Woodman Point's Ammo Jetty is a great place to fish, including herring, snapper and tailor. Ammo Jetty is commonly known as one of the best salmon fishing spots in the metro area!

Snorkelling

Ammo Jetty extends about 100 metres out from the beach to the deeper water, which is filled with sea squirts, blue manna crabs and a large selection of sea sponge. The area also has multiple caves and crevices that are home to all kinds of fish, cuttlefish and sometimes even a seahorse or two!

Snorkelling at Ammo Jetty is suitable for all experience levels, but we suggest staying closer to the shore if you're a beginner.
